at a time when very urgent problems attend the safeguarding and securing of human liberty in the practical order an investigation of the metaphysical foundations of freedom is apt to be dismissed as an untimely and unprofitable bit of theorizing however the very urgency of the problems ought to prompt a willingness to examine and if necessary to revise our fundamental notion of what it means to be free inasmuch as freedom belongs to every spiritual being an adequate understanding of its essence can be gained only from a study of freedom wherever it is found namely in god and in angels as well as in man it is all too easy to confound human freedom with freedom as such and to read into the notion of freedom the imperfections which happen to attend the human mode without however recognizing them as limitations inadequacy of knowledge in this case amounts to positive error for one of the most important facts about human freedom is its essentially limited and imperfect character the thesis which this dissertation undertakes to establish therefore is that free will is not a univocal perfection proper to man but a transcendent perfection of being participating the analogical nature of being as an exercise of the act of to be the metaphysical roots of liberty are sought in the doctrine of participation which teaches that the perfections of created existence are deficient likenesses of the absolute perfections of the creator in whom they exist essentially and without limit
